In the spring of 2006, Douglas Preston and Mario Spezi's book on the Monster of Florence case was published in Italy. The authors described their lone suspect, whom they called by a pseudonym, "Carlo," and they ridiculed the work of police inspector Michele Giuttari, whose own book claimed a satanic cult was responsible for the murders.

Preston: They spin these outrageous theories. Satanic sects ... body parts used in bizarre rituals. And then they start looking for the evidence to support the theory.

Giuttari claimed it was Spezi and Preston who were spinning a fairy tale.
